Jung's Three Theories of Religious Experience (Studies in the Psychology of Religion) J. Harley Chapman
An attempt to sort out Jung's three interwoven theories of religious experience: the scientific-psychological, the phenomenological-mythological, and the metaphysical-theological. This text distinguishes between these three theories so that the interpreter can then make a more discerning response to what Jung was in fact doing, i.e., expounding science and phenomenology and metaphysics. This work aims to help Jung's many-sided contribution to be more clearly seen and appreciated.
