Spelling reform from an educational point of view John Hall Gladstone
The present movement in favour of a reform in the spelling of the English language has been principally taken up by two classes of the community, the philologists and the teachers. It is of course from an educational point of view that the question is regarded by the School Boards for London, Liverpool, Bradford, Birmingham, and other towns, which are now asking for a Royal Commission of inquiry. The main argument employed by these Boards, and by persons engaged in tuition, is that the present spelling causes a very serious waste of time in teaching to read and write correctly.
